Noble Sir

I congratulate your safe returne. Mr.

Bettie tells me he hath provided an excellent paire of garters for you. I haue bespoke your boothose but cannot be assur'd of them till the weeke's end.

Sir Thomas Terringham will be carefull to get you a chapman for your horses: and if he might but knowe who it is that seekes soe much commaund over you, at your Musters, he wold trie his power with my Lord Chamberlaine to free you, of that service. The liutenants (he tells me) you neede not care for. the horse belong to the Captaine only.

He desires a word or two in writing of this you desire, and against whom you desire it. If the Captaine of the horse be your enemie he knowes not which way to free you from his power: but, for the liutenants, he wee will vndertake it. I must craue leaue to stile my selfe

Your humblest servant
