Blakstoune the [◇] of September 1674

Loving brother I have very often desired your Uncle Milvehall to ask your sister whither she would restore my bonds or not, if I can obtain no desire from her, I entreat ye may do me the favor to call for any sight of some bonds that are amongst the rest, granted to me by James Arbuthnot of Blackstone, and take an account of the sums of money contained in them upon paper with the date of each bond by itself, upon my word I know not what the sums are, nor at what time I did receive them, & he & I being this week to close our accounts I am resolved except my bonds be retired or an extract of them by yourself, never to demand an groat of them since I have nothing to instruct my debt but bear allegiance, it was not my intention (when that Lady was pleased to separate herself from me, to have kept such an distance with her, ~~unless~~ til I found my name to be odious yea most ridiculous to her, which those ignominious calumnies now publicly known to all,) doth well testify, but I wish the Lord Almighty forgive her and so do I, and I appeal to her conscience how many abused singular testimonies of my respect within these ten years hath she received; and with what horrid cruelty and disdain she still rewarded me, which at last did bring me almost to nought, as for her present carriage (Authorize her who will) she hath given her reputation an indelible stain, & show her from me that it were much more incumbent for her to ^be keeping home clothed in sackcloth & ashes, bewailing the lamentable judgments that are upon our miserable families then Dinah-like to be gadding abroad to markets contracting unnecessary boardings but what prejudice she can do me in my estate let her do it since it is come this length I shall assist in the spending to the full; and ere it be long I shall be where I shall ^not be much troubled with the shame of it (as I am at present, she would not send me so many of my bed hangings as cover her poor infant's nakedness, nor so many of their back clothes as cover them from the cold but all do I undervalue for God will provide for them, if your affairs can permit I desire ye will do me the favor to come the length of Patrick Crockatt ^in Alyth on Monday that I may impart a little affair to you and you shall be waited on by Sir, your affectionate brother and faithful servant

John Ogilvey
